

I am not a nurseman or dealer-I collect cannas from all over the world to grow as a hobby and I am engaged in cross-pollinating the various species and varieties to produce new and better ones. The cannas offered for sale are my surplus-they are all healthy growing tubers and each one is labeled correctly as to variety. The flower description is necessarily brief and does not do justice to the actual flower color. The many yellow spotted reds are all slightly different-some are red dots, dashes, and blotched, while the crimsons, pinks, etc., range over the entire color scale.

For those interested -

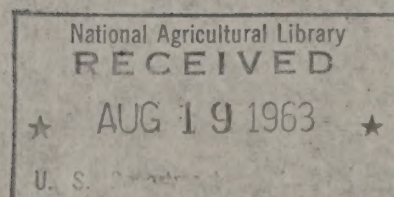

I probably have the largest collection of Canna varieties and species growing in the U.S. I have many others not listed on these sheets. All these Cannas are standard varieties - some dating back to the late 1800's.

In three years of library research I have collected just about everything ever published on Cannas dating back to the early 1800's in French, German, Italian etc., publications.

Copies of this material is available to various students of Cannaceae.
